

ASLA: Preserving Environmental Visions

The American Society of Landscape Architects was founded in 1899 and has celebrated over a century as a national association. ASLA has over 17,000 landscape architects as members, spread across both professional and student chapters. The organization is focused on providing leadership and education designed to preserve and maintain the environments around us. In addition, ASLA takes part in the planning and design of both natural and manmade environments.

Turning Dreams Into Reality

The 4 Kids also believes in creating sustainable landscapes that preserve the environment, while providing enjoyment to the community. We work with landscape architects to help them create more memorable outdoor designs and gardens, with play elements included. We are a part of a number of ASLA initiatives, as well as events and conferences through the organization.

Our company strives to provide education for landscape architects and to hold educational sessions at conferences for these professionals. The 4 Kids works with ASLA to create better communities for everyone through better landscape design and conservation efforts.
