

Sensory Processing Disorder Foundation and STAR Center

The SPD Foundation and STAR Center work to provide children who have sensory processing disorder with occupational therapy. The SPD Foundation aims to increase awareness of this neurological condition that affects both children and adults. The organization strives to give families a better life through educational resources and research, as well as support.

While the foundation works hard to boost awareness and bring hope to the families of children, STAR Center works with the families to provide therapy that can drastically improve the lives of those affected with sensory processing disorder, as well as ADHD and other disorders that involve sensory problems. The center evaluates children via a team that consists of a pediatrician, occupational therapist, social worker, speech therapist and a psychologist, depending on what is required. The service has a range of options for families of all means, so every child can receive treatment.

Play Equipment as a Treatment Option

Occupational therapy is essential for those with sensory processing issues and that's where our play equipment comes in. Our products can be used to encourage children to play and move. We also design custom play equipment that can be used by treatment centers like STAR Center, for occupational therapy. The 4 Kids designs and produces quality playground equipment for children of all abilities.
